

Of Plymouth Plantation: "First Harvest" Rewrite

The Pilgrims gathered all the food they had grown, and they winterized their houses. While some men worked away from camp; others fished, securing bass, cod, and other fish. Every family received plenty. The entire summer, the Pilgrims were successful in finding, growing, and storing food. They were able to acquire a lot of fowl, especially wild turkey. Every person had a large allotment of food, which made the group write home to their friends in England bragging about all they had.
